

PÖRTSCHACHER
MARBLE

Well-tried charmer

The Pörschacher Marble is one of the granular marbles of the old crystalline. Characteristic for him are his deposits of cloudy, light greenish and pinkish red, mostly very delicate coloring. Because of this extraordinary charm, it is often used in the design of art and everyday (light) objects.

Due to its excellent weather resistance, which can also be seen on countless buildings, memorials, grave monuments, walls and paving that go back to the Middle Ages, it has also proven to be versatile in the design of outdoor facilities.

Carinthian natural stone-allrounder

With this unique possibility of access and the studio as a „workshop“ the following visions are to be implemented:

- to help the Pörschacher Marble as a valuable, ancient raw material in all areas of life to its former importance
- position the Pörschacher Marble in the restoration of old monuments
- make the Pörschacher Marble available to a wider circle of artists, designers, architects and those interested in beauty
- develop sustainable products from the Pörschacher Marble, which with their beauty unfold their effect over generations
- using the Pörschacher Marble to create a platform for artists and their works of art who are supposed to deal critically with the present and constructively with the future

The quarry

The quarry in Sekull, community Techelsberg, came into the possession of Thomas Györi and his partner in 2017. The dismantling began in 2019. Having local material independently available is a valuable asset in times like these.
